On entering the room he seemed to have known that I was there, as I was the only one of or necessities, pecuniarily or otherwise, which I obstinately refused, and assured him that an abundance awaited our arrival in Dixie. His ultimatum of impudence soon followed a gutteral effusion of eulogies and deprecations about the atars and stripes, and the cause in which we were engaged; in offering me a position under the old Government. This I resented with all the asperity the circumstances would admit, demanding that he should not make an allusion of the kind in my presence, and turned from the traitor with contempt. Capt. A NEW PICTURE OF THE BATTLE AT HATTERAS.

The first day of the bombardment, the line of battle ships were engaged with Fort Clark, and this little battery of six guns, located near the edge of the surf, would have succeeded in keeping our enemy's ships beyond anchorage, and in that situs, tion they could have done us no material damage, if the guns had been in proper trim, and the Fort supplied with shot and shell. But I will mention here that there has come under my own observation but one gun with proper attachments for regulating its had not even been furnished with aights, the simple great for men in a defenceless condition to withstand. After, spiking their cannon, they retreated as the cannon in the Fort had been imperfectly spiked, it was now a formidable battery for the enemy's defense. A rifled cannon battery had also been erected on the ridge beyond the fort, and, more than all, we have no means of ascer-taining whether all of the five thousand seen anding up the beach had succeeded in doing o or not. Our scouts, however, said they had Thus, from our best information, we must storm and retake Fort Clark, and also a battery of two rified cannon and five thousand men, and only four or five hundred men could be sent from our fort against them. I have mentioned these particulars in answer to the question so frequently asked, why we did not attack the three hundred men on the Commodore Barron came in some time during anholy side of Jordan, may be read with interest by some of your patrons.

During our sojourn in New York, as prisoners of war, we were held in close and well watched imprisonment in Castle Williams, en Governor's Island. Our officers, however, having a more extended range and liberal privileges, were domiciled in Fort Columbus, on the same island. We were enabled, through the kindness of our many friends in the citry, to procure anything that we might nose to render our unhappy condition as comfortable as the circumstances would permit. We had frequent assurances that our friends were many, and that we should lack for nothing, if they should be permitted to administer to our wants.

There has been evidently a softning of feeling, attended with demonstrations of kindness, towards us and the cause we represented. Kindness and deeds of charity manifested towards the Federal prisoners in Richmond, have been circulated through the kindness of our may friends us and the cause we represented. Kindness and deeds of charity manifested towards the Federal prisoners in Richmond, have been circulated through the kindness of wards are only the position. For this positive neglect I am unable to say who is responsible for this neglected and defence now being gone, we looked only to our prisoners in Richmond, have been circulated through the Northern papers with a happy effect. solemoly affirm that I will not take up arms against the United States or assist in any way in carrying on warfare against the government until we are by the laws of civil warfare exchanged and thereby freed from this obligation. We who have taken this obligation were invalids or wounded men and unfit for further service.

The British Government has either been deceived by Seward about this thing, or else it has undertaked it all the while and is preparing to give and destruction to us. Thus, when madness alone aid from its treasury, whenever necessary, to those unfit for further service.

While at the Rip Raps or Fort Calhoun, the report of the Leesburg battle was received, and with it that all the captains of "Tammany Regiment were killed. This was readily accounted for by one of the New York Volunteers, who said that he knew the regiment and had been with the men in eucampment and on-marches, and confidently affirmed that these captains were killed by their own men, for they had connection, to speak of the service or our worthy Commodore, who, it may be seen from these captains were killed by their own men, for they had sworn to do so. A few days before the sailing of the fleet a train of powder was found connected with to him. He could not have been responsible for the fleet a train of powder was found connected with the magazine in Fortress Monroe, and but for the disasters of the previous day, because he was not a part of the fort at least. This they charged upon some of their own men. At one o'clock the geneers of this little fort had discharged their last cartridge, and ceased firing. So noon as this was discovered by the enemy, they have to and fired in a shower of shot and shell too eager to buy it.

The New Orleans Cresond is of the World's opin stand. After, spiking their cannon, they retreated to Fort Hattens. A portion of the fleet then went up to the beach, and prepared to land five thousand men; which we expected had been safely accomplished, nor had we my means of ascertaining what was actually done, as their occupation at Fort Clark randered our communication with the Island impossible. The Monticello endeavored to run through the inlet and cut off our Portsmouth reinforcements which were then coming up. As soon through the inlet and cut off our Portsmouth reinforcements which were then coming up. As soon as she entered the inlet she came within range of the short thirty twos of Fort Hatterss for the first time, and was fired into with such rapidity that, besides the damage to her upper decks, killing several, seven shots entered below water line before she could hank off. So soon as we had landed, which was done under a heavy fire, our boats left for Washington and Newbern for other recruits, thus rendering a timely retreat impossible. It was suggested that we should retake Fort Clark during the night, and several of the officers were more than anxious to attempt it. But officers were more than anxious to attempt it. The second paragraph, in so far as it explains the present high price of cotton in New York, is doubtless correct, but it does not account for the fact of the difference in that market and Liverpool, except ment of the surrender of our troops at Hatteras, their imprisonment and treatment in New York, from one of the prisoners, who has been released and returned home:

November 12th, 1861.—Having seen frequent quotations in your paper and in the Day Book in reference to conversations held with one or others of my brother prisoners, on our return from Yankeedom I have concluded that, perhaps, a full statement of facts and opinions gleaned during our visit on the unbolv side of Jordan, may be read with interest.

Commodore Barron came in some time during the number of sevent in some time during the night of the 28th August, to whom the whole command was immediately delivered. But so acons the comparatively low price of cotton in Liverpool, and the one which that paper believes in, is, that to retreat, and by far too late to mount the camon, which that paper believes in, is, that to retreat, and by far too late to mount the camon, get Southern cotton through the agency of the Yankee Government. It has been "suggested," says the preparations for a heavy bombardment. The loss of Fort Clark then enabled their line of ships to be planted in good anchoring ground. But such was facts and opinions gleshed during our visit on the unholy side of Jordan, may be read with interest planted in good anchoring ground. But such was their distance, that we could reach them with only two, if not more, of the cotton ports small be openable of your patrons.

This is extensively felt, and is ripening into rebellion. The greatest anxiety was felt from the consequences that might arise from the slip of the blockade by Mesars. Mason and Slidell. Three steamers were sent immediately in search of them. From the same source we learn that all circles are anxious to bring about a full exchange of prisoners.

Being frequently asked the terms on which we were released I will give them as follows: "I do

3. There is still another theory, now we believe for the first time broached, which may perhaps account for the low price of cotton in England as compared with New York. It is evident that the essential to the public good. It could scarcely have not wish their armies augmented with men like himself, who were traitors to their own. My object in calling the attention of the press to this circumstance is to confirm the public mind that C. H. Foster is not only himself a traitor to the cause he has sworn to protect, but that he is using his utmost endeavors, at every opportunity, to induce others to follow his own infamous and traitorous course.

A NEW PICTURE OF THE BATTLE AT HATTERAS.

English broker and manufacturer have no faith in the word of the years of the high prices which now obtain. If they were sure no supply could be got from America this winter, cotton, the London Times admits, would run up to fabulous prices, and not a pound of it would be permitted to leave the country. But the English content on the Harter have no faith in the winter, cotton, the London Times admits, would run up to fabulous prices, and not a pound of it would be private memorandum which General Thomas drew up for the information of the President and Secretion dealers have no faith in the market, and in sist upon it, that cotton, when required, will be procured in quantities sufficient to relieve the fears of the manufacturers.

Now what is the ground of this faith? It has commanding officer was utterly incompetent—that
